

Fisher Burton Company

If you're in the Chicago area and need a reliable commercial landscape contractor, contact The Fisher Burton Company. Fisher Burton specializes in landscape construction and maintenance for production housing and commercial development in the suburbs of Chicago. Established in 1983, the company of 120 employees is owned and operated by partners Tom Fisher and Richard Burton.

According to Fisher, segmental retaining walls are becoming more popular landscaping solutions for the type of work performed by the company. In high-density "in-fill" sites, where builders need to construct homes in already populated areas, segmental retaining wall systems, reaching anywhere from 2 to 10 feet and reinforced with geogrid, can help overcome grading issues in an economical and land-efficient manner. Notes Fisher, "If a site has any topography at all, we can use a segmental retaining wall, such as Anchor Wall Systems, to eliminate slopes and accomplish grade changes in a couple of feet."

The Bayberry Development located in a residential area of Waukegan, IL is an excellent example of Fisher Burton's work. "In this case, the developer wanted to add ambiance to the development through landscaping," noted Fisher. "We constructed an Anchor wall to separate the homes on both sides of the development." The wall, constructed of Anchor Diamond® block in "buff" color, stands 5 feet, and is an attractive addition to the new development.

Fisher Burton built this attractive retaining wall of buff-colored Anchor Diamond® beveled blocks to enhance the landscape surrounding a new housing development in suburban Chicago.

This short yet effective retaining wall was installed by Fisher Burton to support and confine the lawns of a townhome development bordering a wooded area.

Said Fisher, the company has "grown up with the segmental retaining wall industry. We've come to be known as a good value in terms of our service. We're very conscientious about schedules and quality. Because we care about the work we do, we're able to meet our client requirements."
